Opening Keynote
From Burned Out to Fired Up: Re-igniting Passion and Purpose
In today's healthcare world, stress and potential burnout are taking its toll. Could there ever be such a thing as “balance”? Is it possible to cultivate resiliency? How do you blend together both a personal life and a professional career with so many demands on your time and energy? In this keynote session, award-winning author and international speaker, Eileen McDargh tackles these questions and offers a unique perspective and solid actions to help move you from feeling like a “crispy critter” to a thriving human being. Be prepared to think, laugh and learn.

Learning Objectives
1. Define “resiliency” as it relates to energy and burnout.
2. State at least two actions that can be practiced to re-ignite passion.

Presenter
Eileen McDargh

The Science of Burnout and Well-being in Healthcare: How “Other People Matter”
The rapid rise of burnout in the healthcare field has many calling it an “epidemic”. What does the science have to say about the causes and consequences of burnout and what can be done to reduce it? In this workshop, Dr. Adair will share the research on burnout in healthcare, where the field is going to address this growing problem, how our colleagues, friends, and families affect our burnout, and evidence-based tools designed to enhance well-being.

Learning Objectives
1. Lists actions to reduce the effects of causes of burnout
2. Describe the research on burnout in healthcare and evidence-based tools to enhance well-being

Provider-led care redesign to safely improve health care value: Finding joy in medicine on the road not taken
In this session Dr. Johnson will share with participants the importance of seeking the road less traveled as a means of improving health care value for patients. Participants will be urged to champion care redesign regardless of the obstacles, to ensure that the evolving changes health care in response to escalating costs are quality driven and maintain or increase patient safety. By improving performance to safely deliver higher quality, more affordable care, medical personnel can contribute to the scaffolding of a better health care delivery model and reinforce patients’ trust to safeguard the provider-patient relationship.

Learning Objectives:
1. Discuss the opportunities for and obstacles to improving health care value.
2. Review assessment strategies to ensure that patient care quality and safety are maintained or improved by value-based performance improvement initiatives.

Presenter:
Pamela T. Johnson, MD
Vice Chair of Quality, Safety & Value, Department of Radiology, Johns Hopkins Medicine

PASSION & PURPOSE: Reigniting the Commitment to Quality and Patient Safety nurse-drive protocols, along with family and patient education. All of this resulted in a decline of the C-diff rates at AGH. However, the Infection Prevention team at AGH continued to research and seek solutions to address concerns with quality and patient safety and discovered other factors around this issue. Learn AGH sought to employ the appropriate utilization of contact isolation through the development and implementation of a C-Diff Isolation policy specific to prevention, identification, treatment and early discontinuation of contact precautions to further decrease their rate of hospital acquired C-Diff.

Learning Objectives
1. List the C-Diff screening changes and the nurse-driven protocol for C-diff initiated at AGH
2. Describe the family and patient education program employed at AGH to decrease the rate of hospital acquired C-Diff.

Leading the Patient Safety Charge—Keeping Our Patients Wound Free
Prompted by concern over the high number of facility-acquired pressure wounds in 2013, this team immediately developed an action plan. Through prevention rounding, order set development, education of frontline staff, and improving the accuracy of identification and documentation of pressure wound staging this facility was able to decrease the average rate of facility acquired pressure wounds by 68%.

Learning Objectives:
List three actions that can be taken to reduce facility acquired pressure wounds.
